

Presidential candidate Paul passionate over hard money Texas legislator once ran investment coin firm

By Al Doyle
Coin World
July 23, 2007

One of the 10 declared Republican candidates for the 2008 presidential race brings to the campaign a background that includes being a coin dealer and a longtime advocate for hard money: Ron Paul.

Although television debates give voters a chance to learn about the candidates, the format does not allow a full opportunity to discuss issues that each presidential hopeful may choose. While he has been able to make some passing references to fiscal policy and sound money, those topics are Paul's passions.

NOTE: This article is copyrighted by Coin World. If you have permission and password to Coin World articles, please click HERE.